

I recently experienced a minor electrical mishap on the boat which prevented my GPS from working during a charter. This marked my first time venturing into Baffin Bay without the aid of the GPS in many years. I immediately felt stress and fear, realizing the treachery of the act. Because I trained myself as a captain long ago without the aid of GPS, and because I made a conscious effort to slow down and exercise extreme caution, I completed the journey safely that day.

Certainly, I would not feel comfortable attempting to do such a thing on a daily basis. Once we have a gadget like GPS and use it regularly, we realize and appreciate its power and importance. Before we had it, we did not know what we were missing. Along with the GPS, I'd place the Power Pole, cell phone, internet and several other supremely useful tools and technologies on the list of things we take for granted today.

Currently, I'm working on a document which gives detailed advice on Using Technology to Enhance Angling Efforts. In the piece, I'm offering strategies and techniques for using the cell phone, computer, GPS, Power Pole and other devices and technologies to make fishing safer and more productive. The document provides detailed descriptions on how to manage and use gps files in HomePort, how to use Google Earth to study the anatomy of the bays in conjunction with gps files, how to generate and save fishing logs in digital format, how to track weather and other celestial data accurately, and it mentions new and innovative devices and software systems related to all those endeavors. Part of the product provides hyperlinks to various websites which offer various kinds of aid to any angler.

I plan on selling the document as a pdf, not as a paper book. A document intended to help one more effectively use technology just seems suited for production and sale as a digital one. I intend to regularly update the product, and making it available as a pdf rather than a printed book will facilitate revisions. I will invite all who purchase it to regularly check with me for updates, and provide alerts about updates on this site.

Stay tuned to CaptainKevBlogs.com for an announcement when this new product becomes available. Or friend and follow me on Facebook for the same purpose.